WHEN THE GREAT ARMY OF THE WEST PASSED IN REVIEW

SPEAKING of his troops, who passed in grand review at Washington at the close of the great war, General Sherman says:

"It was, in my judgment, the most magnificent army in existence—65,000 men, in splendid physique, who had just completed a march of nearly 2,000 miles in a hostile country, in good drill, and who realized that they were being closely scrutinized by thousands of their fellow countrymen and by foreigners. Division after division passed, each commander of an army corps or division coming on the stand during the passage of his command to be presented to the president, cabinet and spectators. The steadiness and firmness of tread, the careful dress on the guides, the uniform intervals between the companies, all eyes directly to the front, and the tattered and bullet-riven flags, festooned with flowers, all attracted notice. Many good people up to that time had looked upon our Western army as a sort of a mob; but the world then saw and recognized as a fact that it was an army in the proper sense, well organized, well commanded and disciplined, and it was no wonder that it had swept through the South like a tornado. For six hours and a half that strong tread of the army of the West resounded along Pennsylvania avenue. Not a soul of that vast crowd of spectators left his place, and when the rear of the column had passed by thousands of spectators still lingered to express their sense of confidence in the strength of a government which could claim such an army."

The statistics of the Civil war are highly interesting in view of what is going on in Europe today. It has been carefully figured out that there were 2,598,304 enlistments in the Union armies during the war and approximately 1,400,000 in the Confederate armies. Reduced to the three-year period there were the equivalent of 1,556,678 enlistments in the Union armies and 1,082,119 in the Confederate armies. The Union casualties were 67,058 killed in battle, 43,012 died of wounds, 224,586 died from disease, 24,872 died from accidents and other causes; total deaths, 359,528; total wounded and recovered, 275,175. The Confederates had 94,000 killed or dead from wounds in battle and 164,000 lost by disease or other causes.

Great Occasion Recalled.

The men who paraded through the streets of the country's cities and towns on Memorial day do not ask to be thought heroes. They are elderly citizens who in their day answered the call just as their sons and their sons' sons would answer it if it came today. The country gave the command, they obeyed.

What makes the parade of these men a great occasion is the greatness of the occasion which it commemorates. Every one of the veterans is a unit in the mass which made up fifty years ago the utmost strength of the greatest republic on earth, exerted to save itself from destruction and to wipe out from it the curse of human slavery.

It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of the work which the Union achieved for humanity or the beauty of the self-sacrifice which the soldiers of 1861 made for the ideal of liberty. It could not be easy for the spectators in Pennsylvania avenue to keep the tears from their eyes as the blue-clad ranks passed by.

All Honor Sacred Dead.

The entire nation lifts its hat on Memorial day to the revered dead; the entire nation lifts its heart to the Almighty who made and has kept the American people a nation. The entire country looks upon the wonderful outcome of the sad strife and marvels at the deeper purposes of Providence in the ordering of the life of the nation. Flowers will decorate all graves, flags will lift their miniature folds above them, prayers will sanctify these places of rest and rejoicing will place its crown upon the memories of the dead.
